Objectives:

To identify the educational needs and challenges of Canadian healthcare providers in the care of patients with psoriasis in the goal of providing evidence-based recommendations, based upon the Canadian healthcare environment, for the development/refinement of educational interventions.

Key Points:

The findings from this needs assessment highlights that psoriasis is a complex systemic disease and that there is an important need for improved patient education related to treatment and management. Moreover, key needs were identified that will allow for the development of evidence-based educational interventions to help improve patient outcomes.
